The Stone Wardens

CAMPAIGN PITCH

It has been a century since the War for Union between the great Kingdom of Caspernos and the dissenting city states of Tuldot entered a standstill. Years of peace have brought prosperity to both nations, but worry among civilians grows as tension begins to rekindle between the capitals. The gods of Caspernos warn the people of a dark future ahead.

In a state of worry, groups of Caspernians pray for the fulfillment of the Prophecy of the Stone Wardens—a promise that Caspernos' elite guard will return to protect the nation during a time of turmoil. Rumors that the Wardens have awoken in the South begin to spread. But signs of conflict have proven to be restless and growing rapidly.

◈ PROLOGUE ◈

You seem to have awoken from a deep hibernation. The sun peeking through the pink morning clouds warms your skin, you move your aching joints, contracting muscles that feel foreign to your limbs. As you look down at your feet—which have been submerged in a foot of earth with weeds firmly rooted at your ankles—a disintegrated metallic helmet slides off your head onto the grassy pasture. An emblem eroded to obscurity is stamped on the rusted piece of armor.

You gaze out to the horizon. You see a dense oak forest. A calm river with a raft boasting a tattered beige sail. All of it is unfamiliar. In fact, aside from a few glimpses of scenery, voices, and faces, you remember nothing about who you are. What feels like your most recent memory was nothing but the unbearable heat of a flame and the numbing freezing of your body.

A dread and fear mustered by confusion arises within you. But before the shock drives you into an uncontrolled rush, you notice something in the distance: a small movement, a figure, which you initially thought was a branchless treetrunk, begins to move. A rusted metal helmet clinging to their head reflects the sunlight into your eyes.

◈ HERE BEGINS THE STONE WARDENS ◈

General Information

Setting and Plot:
You will be playing as the awakened Stone Wardens navigating the vast Kingdom of Caspernos from its southernmost point to the capital in the north. Although you were powerful warriors blessed by the gods, a century of stillness eroded your fighting prowess and memory. The Prophecy of the Stone Wardens compels you to learn more about the land and its people, along with the reason for your awakening. During your journey north, you must regain your strength and uncover your past to see what divine force has resummoned you. But Caspernos and the gods may not be as welcoming as you expect…

Prior Experience and Game Details:
This campaign is near-entirely custom with special mechanics built on the foundation of the traditional D&D 5e rules (2024). It is also designed to be totally beginner friendly for people with high interest but no prior experience playing D&D. It is heavily focused on storytelling, puzzle solving, and character interaction. Though the story is linear in checkpoints, the party's outcomes can massively propagate to result in many different endings.

Themes and Style:
Stone Wardens is largely a traditional D&D campaign set in a medieval fantasy setting. Magically innate creatures, powerful colonial kingdoms, and diverse species of beings populate the world known as the Fallen Firmament. Religious groups dominate the field of magic with minor gods and demigods often coexisting with mortals in the material plane. Political relations between towns to capitals, colonies to ruling kingdoms, and enemy nations are dynamic and impact most places the party will visit.
Willingness to roleplay and get into character is highly encouraged. An interest in story and developing arcs for player characters is also prioritized. General knowledge and liking for fantasy worlds and adventure is a plus. The more people in the party who are keen to lean into these styles will help everyone.

Structure and Qualification:
The campaign is of medium length. This means that it will most likely take:

- 12-15 sessions
- 2.5-3.5 hours a week.

The campaign will follow the same characters which are developed from level 1.
Players are extremely encouraged to stay for the whole duration of the campaign.

- Sessions will not be held during busy weeks.
- The campaign will be organized on a custom website and will require a laptop/tablet to run.